Religious Insanity.

On Sunday morning last, the Junior local of this paper boarded the steamer C. W. Anderson for Nashville. We found quite a number of passengers already on board, and some eight or ten more were added to that number from this place. We left here about 7 o'clock a. m., and commenced taking on passengers at Edmondson's ferry, and continued to do so every few miles until we left Ashland city after night. As a matter of course the ladies occupied all the state-rooms, leaving the men to choose between a corn-sack and the cabin floor. We chose the latter, but did very little sleeping. We arrived at Nashville Monday morning about day-light, and proceeded in company with several ladies and gentlemen to the private boarding-house of Dr. J. H. Mallory, where we were warmly welcomed by him and his amiable lady. After partaking of a sumptuous breakfast, we proceeded to attend to the business which had taken us to that city. In our travels we paid our respects to Messrs. Roberts and Jones, of the American; Messrs. Clark and Bell of the Banner, and Mr. E. M. Hord of the Dixie Farmer, to all of whom we are indebted for courtesies extended to us.

At the afternoon we visited the exposition, and spent a couple of hours very pleasantly. We will not attempt a description of what we saw, but suffice it to say that the building is now complete and is crowded with the works of art, mechanism, etc., and the visitor is well repaid for the time and money spent in its inspection. Let all who visit Nashville go to the centennial. We boarded the train at 4 o'clock that same evening, and arrived at Clarksville at 7:25 and was at our post early Tuesday morning, ready to receive all the money that is due us.

Religious Insanity.

A shocking case of murder under the influence of mental derangement occurred on the south-side last week. A family of negroes, consisting of Dan Lyle, his wife and his sister Susan Coleman, had been attending some of the tumultuary revivals so common among the colored race, and symptoms of insanity were developed out of the excitement fostered at these meetings. They would gain possession of churches, driving out the regular congregations and then keep up their ravings for hours.

For some time they refused admission to their house to anyone, and at last one of the children escaping from the house gave such an alarming account that Constables Ramey and Saunders were dispatched to arrest the parties. The negro struck with an axe, fortunately striking him only with the handle; but he was weak with the blow so as to be compelled to retire. It was soon found that the arrest could not be made without a serious conflict, which, under the circumstances, was deemed best to avoid, and they retired. They then sent for Sheriff Moseley and police officer Morrison, who made the arrest. The negro had been slightly wounded in the previous conflict. On entering the cabin the two younger children, aged respectively three and seven, were found bound with their necks broken. The negroes were compelled to retire.
